Library opens meeting rooms to businesses

St. Mary's County Library Director Kathleen Reif announces that the libraries' meeting rooms can now be reserved and used by businesses for a fee. Previously, only non-profit organizations and government agencies could use the rooms. The fee is $25 per hour, or portion thereof.

Board President Alan Dillingham stated, "This change is in response to requests we have received by some of our local businesses. The Library is pleased to be able to offer this new service in support of our local business owners."

Charlotte Hall and Leonardtown each have one meeting room while Lexington Park has three meeting rooms of which two can be combined to provide a larger meeting space. Free WiFi is available in all meeting rooms.

Meetings rooms can be booked from the library's website, www.stmalib.org by clicking on library services tab and then meeting rooms.
